The Hindenburg Line and the Americans.

The signs point incontestably to the Germans making their best stand on the Hindenburg line. Likewise, there is every indication that Marshal Foch is well aware of this and that he will not halt his offensive when this line is reached, but will battle to break it.

The very name, Hindenburg line, can be associated with Germany's best card. The name, perhaps, was given with a somewhat prophetic view, that if that line were lost all would be lost.

The news of the past twenty-four hours from the battle front seems to be unfolding Marshal Foch's tactics to crush the Hindenburg line. The British have penetrated the vitally important Drocourt-Queant switch of the Hindenburg line. Last night Field Marshal Haig reported his men on the outskirts of Lens. This is at the northern end of the Amiens salient. The Americans and French on the flood tides of daily victory at the central southern end of the Hindenburg line are in sight of the towers of Laon.

This news indicates a "turning back" of the German right and left which will weaken to no small degree the center of the Hindenburg line when the allies reach that point.

Marshal Foch's strategy forecasts another interesting feature—the future employment of the American troops. The first great hole may be torn into the Hindenburg line by the American and French forces notwithstanding the fact that the British are across the line in the north and are slowly crushing their way up the Queant sector.

We may shortly see that the next great move of Marshal Foch, which has been hinted at mysteriously, will be sending of the Americans in force with ample artillery along the Juvigny Plateau to roll back the lower section of the Hindenburg line and deal a crushing blow to the Germans which will send them staggering to the Rhine.

Baseball's Swan Song.

The last ball was thrown, the last man was out, the band played "The Star Spangled Banner," the fans stood at attention at American League Park yesterday afternoon and the baseball season was at an end—"until we and our allies are in Berlin," in the words of E. Lawrence Phillips, official announcer, and the crowd was with him.

It was an American finish of an American game—a sportsman-like and patriotic finish. The curtain fell and with it fell youthful ambitions to be a Cobb or a Johnson, the thrill of the game and personal and monetary sacrifices. But these were willingly made in obedience to the requests of the military authorities and for the winning of the war.

And perhaps no baseball man surrendered the game more patriotically than our own Clark C. Griffith, to whom the baseball world will always give no small credit for the promotion of the game to its high place; for his fairness and gameness and for his effort in making it possible for the boys over there to play the game in back of the front-line trenches by the creation of the Griffith Bat and Ball Fund.

Study War News.

There are still some people who read the war news only in the most superficial way because they cannot pronounce the names of the French and Russian towns in which the world's greatest tragedy is staged.

They never study the war map showing the daily moves made by the allies and the central powers—without which one can no more understand the progress made by either side than one could understand a game of checkers without studying the position of the "men" on the checker-board—for the winning of this world war depends almost entirely upon the winning of territory—of getting "across the Rhine" to Berlin!

If we are to do our best work toward winning the war, we must be intelligent about the methods adopted and the progress made by our men at the front.

The newspapers of the country are spending a lot of money and putting a lot of work into the job of presenting to their readers the facts about the war—all the facts that may be printed by anybody. There is no reason why even the average workman may not be as well informed about the problems of the war as the most "learned high-brow."

He may have a liberal education on the biggest thing that ever happened by carefully studying the daily newspaper—which he already buys—but which he now merely reads.

Different Now.

In the other days when railroads were operated by private corporations for the benefit of stock gamblers and large stockholders, they used to start increasing wages high up. The gamblers took their profits by watering the stock. The chairman of the board, president and big executives added to their salaries every now and then. Well organized labor unions were able to get a bit of increase after fighting hard for more. Those at the bottom, the poorly paid clerk and laborer never received increases of wages.

After the government took over the roads, all employees, excepting the presidents, chairmen, etc., got fatter pay envelopes.

And now the government proposes to add still more to the wages of the lowliest of railroad workers, clerks and laborers.

That will leave less for the presidents and chairmen. Naturally they are convinced that government operation of railroad lines doesn't pay. It doesn't pay them.

Only that "food will win the war" which you don't waste.

Germans face winter with less fuel, less food and less hope than since they started the war.

The wise household commander now lays in coal bullets with which to repel the cold attacks of Gen. Winter.

American Bar Association convention ignores woman suffrage question, which is much like an ostrich would handle the problem.

Old Friends!

By EDMUND VANCE COOKE.

"Hello, Mr. 'Rithmetic, where you been so long? I hope you've been 'behavin' and have come back well and strong. 'Cause you and I are going to have the dandiest old fight; I think I've got your number and can put you down all right."

"Hello, Mr. Spellin'-book, I hope you're feelin' well. 'Cause this year you have simply got to teach me how to spell. You've been a slacker long enough; I tell it to your face. If you don't teach me now, you'll be demoted in disgrace."

"Hello, Mr. Joggerflop, I'm campin' on your track; You teach me better than last term, or else I'll break your back. You needn't teach me how to bound the German empire, though, 'Cause the German empire's bound to be un-bound, I guess you know."

"Hello, Mr. History, you're lookin' rather blue. No wonder! for they certainly are doin' things to you. They're making' history so fast in Europe now, they say, 'hat history is wrong unless they right it every day."

"Hello, all you other books, you're lookin' sort of pale. You've been shut up so long, I guess you thought you were in jail. But now you're open once again, I hope you're feelin' happy. So come and teach me everything. Come on, now! make it snappy!" (Copyright, 1918.)
